

The perfect flowers are held in an upright panicle, 4 to 8 inches tall. Each flower is white, with yellow spots and purple lines in the throat.

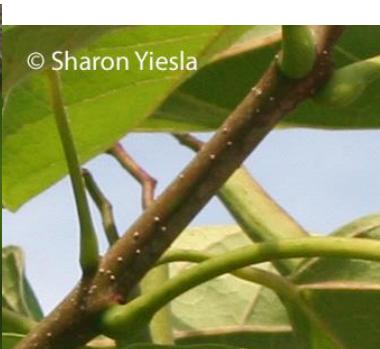

© Sharon Yiesla

The stems are brown to greenish-brown and marked by white lenticels. The leaf scars are crater-like. Buds are small and brown.

© Sharon Yiesla

© Sharon Yiesla

Catalpa speciosa
Northern Catalpa (page 1 of 2)

The fruit is a long bean-like capsule. It can be up to 2 feet long. The unripe fruit is on the left; the mature one on the right.

© Sharon Yiesla

© Sharon Yiesla

The opposite (or whorled) leaves are heart-shaped. The margin is entire. Leaves can be up to 10 inches long.

© Sharon Yiesla

The seeds inside the fruit are in pairs. They have a flat fringe of hairs at the ends.

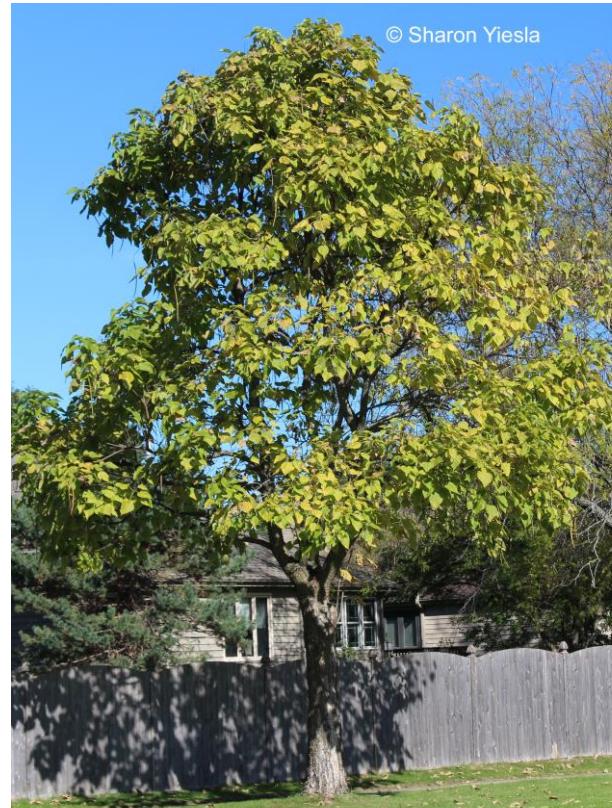

Form is upright and often gnarly due to short, slightly twisted branches. Height up to 60 feet.

Fall color is yellow to yellow-green

© Sharon Yiesla

Catalpa speciosa

Northern Catalpa (page 2 of 2)

